We demand Free Public Transport for all

Fare Free London is a new campaign to make all public transport in London free.

Travel is something we all do. In a major city like London, transport affects us all. We believe that public transport should be free. It opens the city for everyone. It will improve our lives.

We have the money to make public transport free in London and the rest of Britain. Instead of the super-rich and corporations having it all, we can invest in accessible, high quality, free public transport and all enjoy the benefits?

Free public transport is fair. It supports the lowest-income families that are least likely to have a car. It is better, safer, transport. Properly funded to make it accessible for disabled people, people with children and older people and run with a secure, properly paid workforce. It is a creative, inspiring, common-sense way to fight climate change and air pollution.

There are already cities with free public transport - Tallinn (Estonia), Montpellier, Calais and Dunkerque (France) and Albuquerque and Kansas City (USA). In Luxembourg the whole country has free public transport. Why not London?

We call on the London Mayor and GLA to make public transport free for all. This should be part of a national plan to make it free for everyone

Box: Our organisation brings together community groups, trade unions, environmentalists and others who see free public transport as a crucial part of the London we want to live in. Get involved and make London a city fit for everyone.
